October 16, 2012 (Pittsburgh, PA) — Farm to Table Pittsburgh, creators of the popular annual Farm to Table Conference, are hosting the first ever Farm to Table Harvest Tasting on November 10th, 2012 at Bakery Square. The family---friendly, all ages event will feature tastings and samples from fifty local vendors, live performances by 2 Turntables and a Saxophone and an acoustic performance by Jason Kendall. Farm to Table Pittsburgh is the local food and healthy eating component of Pathways to SmartCare Wellness Program. Farm to Table Pittsburgh provides Local Food Programs for schools, employers, senior residencies and community groups. Their goal is to bridge the gap between consumers and local food producers by teaching how locally grown food benefits both physical health and local economic health.

Farm to Table Pittsburgh hosts several small tasting events throughout the year in Western Pennsylvania, culminating in the large scale Farm to Table Conference every Spring. Executive Director Erin Hart says, "We saw a need to host an affordable and local fall tasting event based on feedback from our attendees at our annual Farm to Table Conference. We are thrilled to have fifty local vendors at the Harvest Festival including breweries, wineries, local farms & grocers, organic skincare, some of Pittsburgh's best restaurants and more. For just $20, it's an affordable way to introduce yourself and your family to the benefits of eating and shopping local!"
